

Busting Myths: Regulation and AAC

Jordyn Zimmerman Jordyn Zimmerman

Short Abstract

Whether you are an AAC user, family member or professional — this session is for you! When we receive sensory-motor feedback, it can often help frame our feelings, where our body is in space, and the steps needed for planned movement. Yet, what happens when that messaging isn't clear? Join to challenge or clarify your beliefs around the intersection of sensory-motor regulation and communication access. Together we will think about the balance of the internal system and external experiences, leading us to explore how myths about behavior, motivation, and communication can impact implementation. Through this learning and discussion, we will work through practical ideas to enable access to AAC for those in our community.

Long Abstract

This presentation/workshop is part of the AssistiveWare stream.